

Fakharah Masoom

Tutor

My name is Fakharah Masoom and I am an ESOL Teacher. I graduated from Aston University with an honours degree in Human Biology and soon after pursued a career in teaching. I then gained further qualifications in teaching ESOL from Cambridge University.

In 2016, I continued my professional development and gained my Qualified Teacher Status, which allowed me to teach children in schools. As I continued to teach, I had the opportunity to support and develop new tutors I gained further qualifications in Coaching and Mentoring from Coventry University.

I have been working as an ESOL teacher for the past 16 years at various institutes in Birmingham.

Through my vast experience, I have developed my teaching practices and have worked with a wide range of people from diverse background. I currently work for Birmingham Adult Education and GOAL.

My primary role at GOAL is an English tutor but the role also extends and incorporates the welfare and well-being of my learners. Learner's well-being is essential for their progress and quality of life and hence are supported by meeting their immediate needs. We establish relationships and build a rapport with our learners, which enables them to live a fuller and a happier life while achieving qualifications. I thoroughly enjoy working at Goal due to its excellent strong network of supportive staff with opportunities for personal development, who are dedicated to their learners.

The most rewarding aspect of working as a teacher for me is that I contribute towards making a difference in learner's lives, socially, emotionally, academically and employability and make such a positive impact and difference to my students.
